American landscape painting in the 19th century was obsessed with the then fashionable science of geology. Painters such as Thomas Cole (originator of the so-called 'Hudson River School'), John Kensett and Thomas Moran painted landscapes that depicted distinctively American scenery and allied it with an almost microscopic observation of nature.

Visit www.onegeology.org to see how geological surveys and organisations across the world are trying to make geological maps more accessible. Visit www.onegeology.org/extra to get a glimpse of the way geology is a part of the more aesthetic aspects of all our lives.